

I am opposed to allowing any exceptions to Indiana's law regarding telephone privacy. With the constant change of ownership of banks and other financial institutions, a consumer such as myself is at a severe disadvantage. Under the bank and other financial institutions plan, anyone with a prior business or ongoing business relationship can solicit me. They already do through email and junk mail and other avenues. Through email I always opt out of any communications, yet I still receive them. Why should I be subjected to more unwanted communication. I come to my home to have privacy and not have it interrupted by people outside. The police cannot enter my home without a warrant, why should people calling me on the phone be allowed to enter without my permission. The law allows them to call me on matters directly related to any business relationship I have, they should not be allowed to use that to solicit me for further relationships. I would like some privacy in my home or is it now going to return to be another semi public place where I have no control. Stop the insolence of people and organizations who want to weaken the telephone privacy act. Let our homes stay private places where we choose who to let in.
